Can democracy survive secrecy?
What is the future of the First Amendment in a surveillance society?

These questions will be the focus of a rare and provocative public discussion presented by the Davis Levin First Amendment Conference happening LIVE in Honolulu on Saturday, February 14th in Honolulu, Hawai‘i.

Edward Snowden’s release of documents detailing the government’s massive surveillance program sparked a raging global debate which continues to this day. Choosing not to remain anonymous, Snowden traded home and career for a life in exile, fleeing the U.S., and eventually taking residence in Russia.

A high-level intelligence analyst based in Hawai‘i, in 2013, Snowden gave documents to the press proving the existence (previously shrouded by government as highly sensitive state secrets) of multiple NSA programs that even today collect and use data on ordinary Americans on an extraordinary scale.

This event will be simulcast on ʻŌlelo Community Television and live-streamed by participating Community Media Centers around the state.
