He Wa‘a Hou: An Alter-Native Court for Hawai‘i

By
Ka‘ano‘i Walk, Graduate of the William S. Richardson School of Law, 2008 and recipient of a post-juris doctorate research fellowship for Ka Huli Ao Center for Excellence in Native Hawaiian Law.

As our state courts continue to rule on native Hawaiian issues, it’s useful to look at the experiences of other native peoples. Although the future political atmosphere of Hawai‘i may be cloudy, a court system must still maintain order in these islands. This discussion highlights the best practices employed by the Navajo Nation, Hopi, and Palau court systems in balancing tradition and litigation. A survey of these and other court systems reveals a roadmap of successes and pitfalls for Hawai‘i to consider.
